Welcome to the world of SID! SID is the joint effort of three Macintosh enthusiasts who want to give something back to the industry. The Mac community has given us so much over the last few years that we put some of our energy together to produce a royalty-free hardware and software sound input device. Our sincere hope is that SID can be used to help promote the value of the Macintosh and provide the industry with friendlier applications including sound input. Think of SID as our attempt at creating a “kind’er, gentler nation...”

This SID release is made up of the following:

- SID Press Release - the press release announcing the release of SID
- SID Hardware - hardware theory of operations and parts list
- SID Schematic - schematic for the SID hardware
- SID Software - documentation for the software driving routines
- HearHere.c - C source code for the software driver HearHere (Think C)
- HearHere.h - source code of the symbolic references in HearHere
- SID Test Util.c - source code for a test utility application (Think C)
- SID Test Util - executable test utility application

Any product development team is like a Rock ’n Roll band. Each must work together, using each others strengths to produce quality. Our band includes:

- On lead guitar: Eric Gould
Coordinated the hardware and software into a cohesive product and led the team to produce a commercial-quality product.
- On keyboards (literally): Jeffrey Siegel
Designed all of the software and had the idea for starting the band in the first place.
- On drums: Dave Fleck
Created a first class hardware product without the need for extra power, cables, or batteries.

We look forward to hearing from you. Individually, we can be reached through a variety of electronic means including: MCI Mail, AppleLink, MacNet, CompuServe, and the Twilight Clone BBS in Silver Spring, Maryland (301) 946-5032.

The SID hardware, software, documentation, and test program are all:
