

Introducing Helpers

Probably the first thing you noticed about Black Night is that it behaves like a Macintosh Application. You can open as many windows as you like, and all the usual commands such as New, Open and Save behave exactly as you'd expect them to do.

Unfortunately, you probably only have one telephone line and one modem, so multiple windows may not be much use to you. In fact, although the Telnet people will love it, you may find it a nuisance.

So I've introduced the concept of Helpers. Helpers come in several flavours (applications, post processors, documents, resources helpers, telephone numbers and scripts), and are all available at the drag of a mouse.