

well...

It's 2:09 am on the morning of monday, september 16th. I bounce from web-site to web-site, looking for some bit of novelty to kill off my boredom. As I check one of my favorite mac-hacking sites, what do I see? The Hackinosh Bible v1.1!!!

Now, I'm not saying that my little reference document is as ground-breaking as, oh say, Hackers Helper or any of the clones. But, nonetheless, it is very satisfying to see a touch of my own influence mixed into the new counterculture. What started as a repository for my own reference is now a legit ware! cool!

Before you start thinking that I have grown an ego the size of Pam Anderson's chest, let me repeat that none of this is mine. All I have done is take some well written documents and put them in one easy to find place. Again, I couldn't hack my way out of a wet paper bag. (although, thanx to this doc, I can now circumvent nag-boxes!)

Now that I know there is a "market" for this, I will continue to drop it at whatever ftp site I happen to be hanging out at that week. If you have a nugget of wisdom you would like to contribute, post it in alt.hackintosh with the subject "attn. madmonk" in the subject.

...and, oh, by the way...

This document is for educational purposes only.

madmonk