There was alot of terribly stupid things happening in the Vietnam War. Some of it is starting to come out from the veterans of that war. Now the u.s. military is accused of dropping nerve gas on a village of vietnamese killing innocents and some suspected american defectors.

Cnn does a news story on it including interviews with veterans who witnessed such events. The pentagon promises to investigate the matter. a few weeks later the two producers who put the piece together are fired and the newscaster who did the interview is threatened but keeps his job on the matter that he had little if anything to do with it, he was merely acting as a figurehead for the story. Jack Smith(senior producer) and April Oliver(producer) were the People fired in response to the news report. The two producers have piles of paper worth in interviews supporting the story but most of it wasn't even acknowledged because of the pressure the News corporation was getting. President Of Cnn, Rick Caplan feared that there would be a congressional hearing that would punish Cnn for its story so he had the story taken back and had the producers fired.

What kind of investigation would the pentagon do if it was the only organization which could have authorized nerve gas? Its sad that they get away with this so easily. I doubt the integrity of news corporations like cnn. Watch the news read the papers watch for censorship and political bullying, you will see it happen in every news organization.
