Changing a Video Display Driver

To properly display the full-color pictures provided in Vacation Dreamer, a VGA or SuperVGA video display capable of showing at least 256 colors is recommended. While 16-color VGA is supported, the lack of colors makes the quality of the pictures displayed very poor. If your system is currently configured to use a 16-color VGA or SuperVGA video display driver, you should upgrade your display driver before using Vacation Dreamer.

To change video display drivers:

1. Run the Windows Setup program (normally found in the Main group).
2. Choose the Change System Settings... option from the Options menu.
3. Select the appropriate 256-color video driver from the Display drop-down box.
4. Restart Microsoft Windows when requested to switch to the new display driver.

If the desired video display driver is not already installed on your system, you will need to install it from the driver distribution disk normally provided when you purchase a system or video display adapter. To install a driver from a distribution disk, select the Other display (Requires disk from OEM)... entry at the bottom of the Display drop-down box. Insert the driver distribution disk when requested then choose the desired display driver from the new list and follow the instructions provided.

If your system is not MPC compliant and only supports a 16-color VGA video display, you will still be able to use Vacation Dreamer, but the quality of most of your graphics will be very poor. It is highly recommended that you upgrade your system to support at least a 256-color VGA video adapter. Many major programs currently require or support 256 colors and many others are becoming available all the time. In addition, display adapters capable of displaying at least 256 colors generally include graphic coprocessors that can greatly improve the performance of Microsoft Windows.
