Velocity

Velocity is a similar quantity to speed, and is measured in the same units (m/s). However, unlike speed, velocity has a direction as well as a magnitude. Velocity is a vector, and its magnitude and direction can be shown with an arrow.

You can calculate the average velocity during a given time using the formula:

velocity = displacement
                      time