

Vectors and scalars

In physics, quantities that have both a size and a direction (such as displacement) are called vectors. The size of a vector is also called its magnitude. Quantities that have magnitude but no direction, such as distance, time, or mass, are called scalars.