

Dynamic friction

When two surfaces are sliding over each other, the frictional force between them is called sliding or dynamic friction. This force does not depend on the speed with which the surfaces are moving.

Dynamic friction is usually a little less than the maximum static friction for the same surfaces.