

If one buxom, scantily clad babe is good for sales, then two must be better...and three is a sure fire guarantee of success! Or at any rate, that may have been the thinking behind the cover to the May 1940 issue of PRIVATE DETECTIVE STORIES. Laurence Donovan is present inside the issue with "Death Dances on Dimes." Although he didn't write them under his own name, Donovan is best remembered today for his many pulp hero stories that appeared under house names, including Doc Savage, The Whisperer, Pete Rice and The Skipper.
