

SAUCY ROMANTIC ADVENTURES was a short-lived spicy adventure pulp, lasting for five issues from May through October 1936. In addition to several great covers by Norman Saunders, the magazine's chief claim to fame lies in the appearance of the first five stories featuring that masked female crimefighter, The Domino Lady. The issue depicted, October 1936, features The Domino Lady in "Black Legion" by Lars Anderson. To date, it has not been determined whether Lars Anderson was a real person or merely a pseudonym. After SAUCY ROMANTIC ADVENTURES was discontinued, the sixth (and final) story of The Domino Lady, "The Domino Lady's Double", appeared in the November 1936 issue of its sister publication, MYSTERY ADVENTURE MAGAZINE. The Domino Lady was recently resurrected in a series of comic books written and drawn by pulp fan Ron Wilber and published by Eros.
