

A setting, such as a color or compression setting, that is assigned by the program rather than by the user.

A program's default setting usually does not need to be changed, but can be if a different effect is desired.