

The latissimus dorsi muscle covers the lower back and lower part of the thorax extending laterally into the upper limb, to form with the teres major, the posterior axillary fold. This is accentuated when the arm is adducted against resistance, and the border of latissimus dorsi can be traced downwards to the iliac crest.