

The tips of the fused transverse processes form the lateral sacral crest, which consists of a vertical row of small tubercles, referred to as the 'transverse tubercles'.