

The superior gluteal vein is formed in the gluteal region between gluteus medius and minimus by the vena comitantes of the superior gluteal artery; tributaries from the buttock correspond to the arterial branches. The veins pass posteriorly to enter the pelvis via the greater sciatic foramen above the piriformis muscle where they commonly unite into a single vessel before draining into the internal iliac vein.