

The highest nuchal lines curve laterally above the superior nuchal lines from the external occipital protuberance. They are frequently faint but are important features as each gives attachment to the epicranial aponeurosis.