

The foramen transversarium is a laterally directed opening in the transverse process located under the posterior part of the superior articular facet. It is bounded anteriorly by the embryonic costal element, posteriorly by the embryonic transverse process, laterally by the costal lamina and medially by the pedicle. This foramen transmits the vertebral vein, vertebral artery and associated sympathetic plexus.