

A transverse ridge that runs on the anterior surface of the sacrum between the pelvic sacral foramina represents the site of fusion of the second and third sacral vertebrae. Adjacent surfaces are fused at their margins and enclose a rudimentary intervertebral disc located centrally.