

The intertransverse ligaments extend from the inferior surface of one transverse process to the superior surface of the subjacent transverse process along the length of the vertebral column. They are irregular, thin and often absent or blended with the intertransversarii muscles.

They are considered false ligaments in the lumbar spine. In the cervical spine they are irregular and reinforced by the intertransversarii muscles.