

The transverse band of the cruciform ligament otherwise known as the 'transverse ligament of the atlas' passes between small prominent tubercles on the medial aspects of each lateral mass of C1 (atlas). It grooves the posterior aspect of the dens and holds it against the anterior arch of the atlas, forming the median atlanto-axial joint.