

The intertransverse ligaments are, generally, insignificant bands connecting adjacent transverse processes. In the cervical region, they consist of irregular fibers largely replaced by intertransversarii muscles. In the thoracic region, they intimately blend with adjacent muscles and in the lumbar region they are thin and membranous.