

There are five lumbar spinal cord segments, each associated with the emergence of a pair of spinal nerves. There is no surface indication of segmentation; the limits of each segment being demarcated by an imaginary transverse plane through the spinal cord midway between the attachments of the rootlets of adjacent pairs of spinal nerves.