

The posterior median sulcus is a shallow midline impression extending the whole length of the posterior surface of the spinal cord. A posterior median septum of neuroglia passes from the sulcus to almost the central canal.