

The spinal branches arise from the dorsal branches of the posterior intercostal arteries arise from their dorsal branches. They enter the vertebral foramen (canal) through the intervertebral foramina, to supply the vertebrae, spinal cord and meninges. Each branch anastomoses with the spinal arteries above and below and with the corresponding contralateral artery spinal branch.