

Radicular arteries arise from the bifurcation of the spinal arteries, which arise at differing vertebral levels, from the vertebral, deep cervical, intercostal and lumbar arteries to supply the spinal cord. The larger posterior radicular arteries enter the vertebral foramina along the length of the vertebral column with the dorsal nerve roots of the spinal cord to supply the dorsal root ganglia.