

With the finger placed on the external occipital protuberance in the posterior midline of the skull the superior nuchal line can be traced laterally to the posterior aspect of the mastoid process; it is slightly convex superiorly. The superior nuchal line marks the boundary between the head and neck.