

The cutaneous branches of the third, fourth and fifth cervical dorsal rami supply skin over the back of the neck from the skull to the level of the vertebra prominens, the lower rami extending as far laterally as the posterior axillary line.