

The medial branches from the upper five thoracic sympathetic ganglia are small. They provide small branches to the thoracic aorta, which along with branches of the greater splanchnic nerves form a thoracic aortic plexus on the surface of the aorta. Fibers also pass to the posterior pulmonary plexus and deep part of the cardiac plexus.