

Overview

Microsoft Chat is the only Internet chat program that gives you the option of conversing inside a comic strip. As with a standard chat program, you can enter a chat room on an Internet server and conduct real-time conversations with other people. But with Microsoft Chat, you can also pick a cartoon character to represent you, and your conversation appears as word balloons inside the frames of a comic strip. As a cartoon character, you can express a wide range of emotions, send "thoughts," whisper to a selected recipient, and save the chat session for offline viewing.

The Microsoft Chat window is composed of the following parts:

- A viewing pane where the conversation is displayed
- A member list pane that lists all the people in a chat room
- A compose pane (a text box at the bottom of the window) where you type your messages
- Buttons you use to send your messages

If you choose to converse inside a comic strip, you will also see:

- A "starring" pane that displays the title of the chat and lists the participants
- A self-view pane that shows what your character looks like
- An emotion wheel that enables you to control all of your character's emotions
