Internet

Microsoft's Internet services are enormously popular. More than 750,000 of our customers access the Microsoft Knowledge Base or Microsoft Software Library each week by using Internet services. We also have additional Microsoft information such as resource kits, white papers, and the latest information about Microsoft products. It's easy to search through these technical sources to find what you need.

If you're an Internet user, you can access this information for no charge (connect charges may apply) at the following locations:

The Microsoft World Wide Web support site is located at <http://www.microsoft.com/support/>. This site contains the Microsoft Frequently Asked Questions, the Microsoft Knowledge Base, the Microsoft Software Library, password-protected areas for support contract holders and support partners, various white papers, and other Microsoft product and service information.

The Microsoft FTP site, located at <ftp.microsoft.com>, is a repository for the Microsoft Software Library, the Microsoft Knowledge Base, resource kit utility files, and other Microsoft product information files. This site can be accessed via anonymous logon.

The Microsoft Network and Other Online Services

You can access the 50,000-plus Microsoft Knowledge Base articles and the Microsoft Software Library files through MSN, The Microsoft Network online service, and other online services. Additional technical information and community services, such as the Microsoft Frequently Asked Questions, Member-to-Member Bulletin Board Services and World Wide Web links, are available on MSN. To access Microsoft support services on MSN, choose Go To Other Location from the Edit menu and type MSSUPPORT.
