Description:

This program replaces Tel_ID.zip. Revised May 2,1996.

The Telephone ID Annunciator is a Windows95 program that allows the user to utilize the "CallerID" features of their modem. A user phone directory is created with an internal editor and database. Audio announcement files that link the directories' entries to the phone number are generated by an internal audio recorder. You can make the announcements any thing you wish.

When the ID Annunciator is activated it monitors the telephone line connected to the modem. When the phone rings it intercepts the ID message and compares it to the users directory. If the phone number in the incoming ID message matches a number in the user directory, the associated audio announcement is played. If it does not match a directory entry, a default message is played. If there is no phone number in the ID message, an announcement of such is made. All audio announcements are made after the second telephone ring.

If you connect the audio output of your sound board to a home sound system, you can screen your incoming calls without leaving your easy chair. All incoming ID message announcements can be played back at any time. A daily log file of activity can be saved, and past logs can be browsed.

You have a time limit to try it out. Access will be denied after 20 days. You can register it after 20 days, however, and not lose any of your data. Registration will give you a key that will eliminate the 20 day restriction and nag screen. If you decide you don't want it, it can be uninstalled by Windows95.

This is really a great full featured program at a very modest cost that matches or surpasses other products with costs above $100.
