Ashtavakra

Once upon a time there was a student of the scriptures who could not supporthis family. He would work hard all day every day and then read aloud theverses late into the nights. His wife, round of belly with their coming child, would sit beside him in the dim room, listening as her weary beloved read thewords of God. One day in her eighth month a voice from inside her belly said to the father: "Sir, you are mispronouncing that verse." Enraged to becorrected by an invisible spirit, the father cursed, and so the child was borndeformed, with eight crooks in his body. Hence his name Ashtavakra whichmeans eight bends. The boy was an enlightened master who took birth to reveal in simple words the essence of mystical experience. His most famous disciple was Janaka, king of the known world, father of the wife of God, daughter of the earth, Sita. Thebook based on that teaching is called The Song of the Eightfold Cripple, or Ashtavakra Gita and entails an eightfold path to wholeness. Janaka said How is knowledge to be acquired? How is liberation to be attained? And how is dispassion to be reached? Tell me this, sir. 1.1 Ashtavakra saidIf you are seeking liberation, my son, shun the objects of thesenses like poison. Practise tolerance, sincerity, compassion, contentment and truthfulness like nectar. 1.2You are neither earth, water, fire, air or even ether. Forliberation know yourself as consisting of consciousness, thewitness of these . 1.3If only you will remain resting in consciousness, seeing yourselfas distinct from the body, then even now you will become happy, peaceful and free from bonds. 1.4You do not belong to the brahmin or any other caste, you are not atany stage, nor are you anything that the eye can see. You areunattached and formless, the witness of everything - so be happy. 1.5 Righteousness and unrighteousness, pleasure and pain are purely of the mind and are no concern of yours. You are neither the doer northe reaper of the consequences, so you are always free. 1.6 You are the one witness of everything, and are always totally free. The cause of your bondage is that you see the witness as somethingother than this, 1.7Since you have been bitten by the black snake of the self-opinion that I amthe doer, drink the nectar of faith in the fact that "I am not the doer", and be happy. 1.8Burn down the forest of ignorance with the fire of the understanding that I amthe one pure awareness, and be happy and free from distress. 1.9That in which all this appears - imagined like the snake in a rope, that joy, supreme joy and awareness is what you are, so be happy. 1.10 If one thinks of oneself as free, one is free, and if one thinks of oneself asbound, one is bound. Here this saying is true, Thinking makes it so . 1.11Your real nature is as the one perfect, free, and actionless consciousness, the all-pervading witness unattached to anything, desireless and at peace. It is from illusion that you seem to be involved in samsara. 1.12Meditate on yourself as motionless awareness, free from anydualism, giving up the mistaken idea that you are just a derivative consciousness, or anything external or internal. 1.13You have long been trapped in the snare of identification with thebody. Sever it with the knife of knowledge that "I am awareness", and be happy, my son, 1.14You are really unbound and actionless, self-illuminating and spotless already. The cause of your bondage is that you are stillresorting to stilling the mind. 1.15All of this is really filled by you and strung out in you, for whatyou consist of is pure awareness - so dont be small minded. 1.16You are unconditioned and changeless, formless and immovable unfathomable awareness and unperturbable, so hold to nothing butconsciousness. 1.17Recognise that the apparent is unreal, while the unmanifest isabiding. Through this initiation into truth you will escape fallinginto unreality again. 1.18Just as a mirror exists everywhere both within and apart from its reflected images, so the Supreme Lord exists everywhere within andapart from this body. 1.19Just as one and the same all-pervading space exists within andwithout a iar, so the eternal, everlasting God exists in the totality of things, 1.20 Janaka said Truly I am spotless and at peace, the awareness beyond natural causality. All this time I have been afflicted by delusion. 2.1As I alone give light to this body, so I do to the world, As are sult the whole world is mine, or alternatively nothing is. 2.2So now abandoning the body and everything else, by some goodfortune or other my true self becomes apparent. 2.3Just as waves, foam and bubbles are not different from water, soall this which has emanated from oneself, is no other than oneself.2.4Just when analysed as cloth is found to be just thread, so when allthis is analysed it is found to be no other than oneself. 2.5Just as the sugar produced from the juice of the sugarcane ispermeated with the same taste, so all this, produced out of me, iscompletely permeated with me. 2.6From ignorance of oneself, the world appears, and by knowledge of oneself it appears no longer. From ignorance of the rope a snakeappears, and by knowledge of it it appears no longer. Shining is my essential nature, and I am nothing over and beyondthat. When the world shines forth, it is simply me that is shiningforth. 2.8All this appears in me imagined due to ignorance, just as a snakeappears in the rope, the mirage of water in the sunlight, and silver in mother of pearl. 2.9All this, which has originated out of me, is resolved back into metoo, like a jug back into clay, a wave into water, and a braceletinto gold. 2.10How wonderful I am! Glory to me, for whom there is no destruction remaining even beyond the destruction of the world from Brahma downto the last clump of grass. 2.11How wonderful I am! Glory to me, solitary even though with a body neither going or coming anywhere. I who abide forever, filling allthat is, 2.12How wonderful I am! Glory to me! There is no one so clever as me!I who have borne all that is forever, without even touching it withmy body! 2.13How wonderful I am! Glory to me! I who possess nothing at all, oralternatively possess everything that speech and mind can refer to 2.14Knowledge, what is to be known, and the knower - these three do notexist in reality. I am the spotless reality in which they appear because of ignorance. 2.15Truly dualism is the root of suffering. There is no other remedyfor it than the realisation that all this that we see is unreal, and that I am the one stainless reality, consisting of consciousness. 2.16I am pure awareness though through ignorance I have imagined myselfto have additional attributes. By continually reflecting like this, my dwelling place is in the Unimagined. 2.17For me here is neither bondage nor liberation. The illusion haslost its basis and ceased. Truly all this exists in me, thoughultimately it does not even exist in me. 2.18I have recognised that all this and my body are nothing. While mytrue self is nothing but pure consciousness, so what can theimagination work on now? 2.19The body, heaven and hell, bondage and liberation, and fear too, All this is pure imagination. What is there left to do for me whosevery nature is consciousness? 2.20Truly I do not see dualism even in a crowd of people. What pleasureshould I have when it has turned into a wilderness? 2.21I am not the body, nor is the body mine. I am not a living being. I am consciousness. It was my thirst for living that was mybondage. 2.22 Truly it is in the limitless ocean of myself, that stimulated by the colourful waves of the worlds everything suddenly arises in the wind of consciousness. 2.23It is in the limitless ocean of myself, that the wind of thoughtsubsides, and the traderlike living beings world bark is wreckedby lack of goods. 2.24How wonderful it is that in the limitless ocean of myself the wavesof living beings arise, collide, play and disappear, according to their natures. 2.25 Ashtavakra said Knowing yourself as truly one and indestructible, how could a wiseman possessing self-knowledge like you feel any pleasure inacquiring wealth? 3.1Truly, when one does not know oneself, one takes pleasure in the objects of mistaken perception, just as greed arises for the mistaken silver in one who does not know mother of pearl for whatit is. 3.2All this wells up like waves in the sea. Recognising, I am That, why run around like someone in need? 3.3 After hearing of oneself as pure consciousness and the supremelybeautiful, is one to go on lusting after sordid sexual objects? 3.4When the sage has realised that he himself is in all beings, and all beings are in him, it is astonishing that the sense of individuality should be able to continue. 3.5It is astonishing that a man who has reached the supreme non-dualstate and is intent on the benefits of liberation should still besubject to lust and held back by sexual ctivity. 3.6It is astonishing that one already very debilitated, and knowing very well that its arousal is the enemy of knowledge should stillhanker after sensuality, even when approaching his last days. 3.7It is astonishing that one who is unattached to the things of this world or the next, who discriminates between the permanent and theimpermanent, and who longs for liberation, should still feel fearfor liberation. 3.8Whether feted or tormented, the wise man is always aware of hissupreme self-nature and is neither pleased nor disappointed. 3.9The great souled person sees even his own body in action as if itwere some-one elses, so how should he be disturbed by praise orblame? 3.10Seeing this world as pure illusion, and devoid of any interest init, how should the strong-minded person, feel fear, even at the approach of death? 3.11 Who is to be compared to the great souled person whose mind is freeof desire even in disappointment and who has found satisfaction inself-knowledge? 3.12How should a strong-minded person who knows that what he sees is byits very nature nothing, consider one thing to be grasped and another to be rejected? 3.13For someone who has eliminated attachment, and who is free fromdualism and from desire, an object of enjoyment that comes ofitself is neither painful nor pleasurable. 3.14Ashtavakra saidCertainly the wise person of self-knowledge, playing the game of worldly enjoyment, bears no resemblance whatever to the worldsbewildered beasts of burden. 4.1 Truly the yogi feels no excitement even at being established inthat state which all the Devas from Indra down yearn fordisconsolately. 4.2He who has known That is untouched within by good deeds or bad, just as the sky is not touched by smoke, however much it may appear to be. 4.3Who can prevent the great-souled person who has known this wholeworld as himself from living as he pleases? 4.40f all four categories of beings, from Brahma down to the lastclump of grass, only the man of knowledge is capable of eliminating desire and aversion. 4.5 Rare is the man who knows himself as the undivided Lord of theworld, and no fear occurs to him who knows this from anything. 4.6Ashtavakra saidYou are not bound by anything. What does a pure person like youneed to renounce? Putting the complex organism to rest, you can goto your rest. 5.1 All this arises out of you, like a bubble out of the sea. Knowingyourself like this to be but one, you can go to your rest. 5.2In spite of being in front of your eyes, all this, being insubstantial, does not exist in you, spotless as you are. It is an appearance like the snake in a rope, so you can go to your rest.5.3Equal in pain and in pleasure, equal in hope and in disappointment, equal in life and in death, and complete as you are, you can go toyour rest. 5.4Ashtavakra saidI am infinite like space, and the natural world is like a jar. Toknow this is knowledge, and then there is neither renunciation acceptance or cessation of it. 6.1I am like the ocean, and the multiplicity of objects is comparableto a wave. To know this is knowledge, and then there is neitherrenunciation, acceptance or cessation of it. 6.2I am like the mother of pearl, and the imagined world is like the silver. To know this is knowledge, and then there is neitherrenunciation, acceptance or cessation of it. 6.3 Alternatively, I am in all beings, and all beings are in me. Toknow this is knowledge, and then there is neither renunciation, acceptance or cessation of it. 6.4Janaka saidIt is in the infinite ocean of myself that the world bark wandershere and there, driven by its own inner wind. I am not upset bythat. 7.1Let the world wave of its own nature rise or vanish in the infiniteocean of myself. There is no increase or diminution to me from it.7.2It is in the infinite ocean of myself that the imagination calledthe world takes place. I am supremely peaceful and formless, and assuch I remain. 7.3My true nature is not contained in objects, nor does any objectexist in it, for it is infinite and spotless. So it is unattached, desireless and at peace, and as such I remain. 7.4Truly I am but pure consciousness, and the world is like aconjuror's show, so how could I imagine there is anything here to take up or reject? 7.5Ashtayakra saidBondage is when the mind longs for something, grieves aboutsomething, rejects something, holds on to something, is pleased about something or displeased about something. 8.1Liberation is when the mind does not long for anything, grieveabout anything, reject anything, or hold on to anything, and is notpleased about anything or displeased about anything. 8.2Bondage is when the mind is tangled in one of the senses, and liberation is when the mind is not tangled in any of the senses.8.3When there is no me that is liberation, and when there is me thereis bondage. Considering this earnestly, do not hold on and do notreject. 8.4Ashtavakra saidKnowing when the dualism of things done and undone has been put torest, or the person for whom they occur has, then you can here andnow go beyond renunciation and obligations by indifference to suchthings. 9.1Rare indeed, my son, is the lucky man whose observation of theworld's behaviour has led to the extinction of his thirst forliving, thirst for pleasure and thirst for knowledge. 9.2All this is impermanent and spoilt by the three sorts of pain. Recognising it to be insubstantial, comtemptible and only fit forrejection, one attains peace, 9.3 When was that age or time of life when the dualism of extremes didnot exist for men? Abandoning them, a person who is happy to takewhatever comes attains perfection. 9.4Who does not end up with indifference to such things and attainpeace when he has seen the differences of opinions among the greatsages, saints and yogis? 9.5Is he not a guru who, endowed with dispassion and equanimity, achieves full knowledge of the nature of consciousness, and leadsothers out of samsara? 9.6If you would just see the transformations of the elements asnothing more than the elements, then you would immediately be freedfrom all bonds and established in your own nature. 9.7One's inclinations are samsara. Knowing this, abandon them. Therenunciation of them is the renunciation of it. Now you can remain you are. 9.8Ashtavakra saidAbandoning desire, the enemy, along with gain, itself so full ofloss, and the good deeds which are the cause of the other two -practice indifference to everything. 10.1Look on such things as friends, land, money, property, wife, and bequests as nothing but a a dream or a three or five-day conjuror's show. 10.2Wherever a desire occurs, see samsara in it. Establishing yourselfin firm dispassion, be free of passion and happy. 10.3The essential nature of bondage is nothing other than desire, andits elimination is known as liberation. It is simply by not being attached to changing things that the everlasting joy of attainmentis reached. 10.4You are one, conscious and pure, while all this is just inertnon-being. Ignorance itself is nothing, so what need have you ofdesire to understand? 10.5Kingdoms, children, wives, bodies, pleasures these have all beenlost to you life after life, attached to them though you were. 10.6Enough of wealth, sensuality and good deeds. In the forest of sams are the mind has never found satisfaction in these. 10.7 How many births have you not done hard and painful labour withbody, mind and speech. Now at last stop! 10.8Ashtavakra saidUnmoved and undistressed, realising that being, non-being andtransformation are of the very nature of things, one easily findspeace. 11.1At peace, having shed all desires within, and realising thatnothing exists here but the Lord, the Creator of all things, one is no longer attached to anything. 11.2Realising that misfortune and fortune come in their turn from fate one is contented, one's senses under control, and does not like ordislike. 11.3Realising that pleasure and pain, birth and death are from fate, and that one's desires cannot be achieved, one remains inactive, and even when acting does not get attached. 11.4Realising that suffering arises from nothing other than thinking dropping all desires one rids oneself of it, and is happy and atpeace everywhere. 11.5Realising, I am not the body, nor is the body mine. I am awareness one attains the supreme state and no longer remembers things doneor undone. 11.6Realising, It is just me, from Brahma down to the lat clump ofgrass, one becomes free from uncertainty, pure, at peace and unconcerned about what has been attained or not. 11.7Realising that all this varied and wonderful world is nothing, one becomes pure receptivity, free from inclinations, and as if nothing existed, one finds peace. 11.8Janaka saidFirst of all I was averse to physical activity, then to lengthyspeech, and finally to thinking itself, which is why I am nowestablished. 12.1In the absence of delight in sound and the other senses, and bythe fact that I am myself not an object of the senses, my mind isfocused and free from distraction which is why I am nowestablished. 12.20wing to the distraction of such things as wrong identification, one is driven to strive for mental stillness. Recognising this pattern I am now established. 12.3By relinquishing the sense of rejection and acceptance, and withpleasure and disappointment ceasing today, brahmin - I am nowestablished. 12.4Life in a community, then going beyond such a state, meditationand the elimination of mind-made objects - by means of these I haveseen my error, and I am now established. 12.5Just as the performance of actions is due to ignorance, so their abandonment is too. By fully recognising this truth, I am nowestablished. 12.6Trying to think the unthinkable, is doing something unnatural tothought. Abandoning such a practice therefore, I am nowestablished. 12.7He who has achieved this has achieved the goal of life. He who isof such a nature has done what has to be done. 12.8Janaka saidThe inner freedom of having nothing is hard to achieve, even withjust a loin-cloth, but I live as I please abandoning both renunciation and acquisition. 13.1Sometimes one experiences distress because of one's body, sometimesbecause of one's tongue, and sometimes because of one's mind. Abandoning all of these, I live as I please in the goal ofhumanity. 13.2Recognising that in reality no action is ever committed, I live as I please, just doing what presents itself to be done. 13.3 Yogis who identify themselves with their bodies are insistent onfulfilling and avoiding certain actions, but I live as I pleaseabandoning attachment and rejection. 13.4No benefit or loss comes to me by standing, walking or lying down, so consequently I live as I please whether standing, walking orsleeping. 13.5I lose nothing by sleeping and gain nothing by effort, soconsequently I live as I please, abandoning loss and success. 13.6Frequently observing the drawbacks of such things as pleasantobjects, I live as I please, abandoning the pleasant and unpleasant. 13.7 Janaka saidHe who by nature is empty minded, and who thinks of things onlyunintentionally, is freed from deliberate remembering like oneawakened from a dream. 14.1When my desire has been eliminated, I have no wealth, friends robber senses, scriptures or knowledge? 14.2Realising my supreme self-nature in the Person of the Witness, the Lord, and the state of desirelessness in bondage or liberation, Ifeel no inclination for liberation. 14.3 The various states of one who is empty of uncertainty within, andwho outwardly wanders about as he pleases, like a madman, can onlybe known by someone in the same condition. 14.4Ashtavakra saidWhile a man of pure intelligence may achieve the goal by the mostcasual of instruction, another may seek knowledge all his life andstill remain bewildered. 15.1Liberation is distaste for the objects of the senses. Bondage islove of the senses. This is knowledge. Now do as you please. 15.2This awareness of the truth makes an eloquent, clever and energeticman dumb, stupid and lazy, so it is avoided by those whose aim isenjoyment. 15.3You are not the body, nor is the body yours, nor are you the doerof actions or the reaper of their consequences. You are eternallypure consciousness the witness, in need of nothing - so livehappily. 15.4Desire and anger are objects of the mind, but the mind is notyours, nor ever has been. You are choiceless, awareness itself and unchanging - so live happily. 15.5 Recognising oneself in all beings, and all beings in oneself, behappy, free from the sense of responsibility and free frompreoccupation with me. 15.6Your nature is the consciousness, in which the whoe world wells up,like waves in the sea. That is what you are, without any doubt, sobe free of disturbance. 15.7Have faith, my son, have faith. Don't let yourself be deluded inthis, sir. You are yourself the Lord, whose property is knowledge, and are beyond natural causation. 15.8The body invested with the senses stands still, and comes and goes. You yourself neither come nor go, so why bother about them? 15.9Let the body last to the end of the Age, or let it come to an endright now. What have you gained or lost, who consist of pureconsciousness? 15.10Let the world wave rise or subside according to its own nature inyou, the great ocean. It is no gain or loss to you. 15.11My son, you consist of pure consciousness, and the world is notseparate from you. So who is to accept or reject it, and how, andwhy? 15.12How can there be either birth, karma or responsibility in that one unchanging, peaceful, unblemished and infinite consciousness whichis you? 15.13Whatever you see, it is you alone manifest in it. How couldbracelets, armlets and anklets be different from the gold? 15.14Giving up such distinctions as He is what I am, and I am not that, recognise that Everything is myself, and be without distinction andhappy. 15.15It is through your ignorance that all this exists. In reality youalone exist. Apart from you there is no one within or beyondsamsara. 15.16Knowing that all this is an illusion, one becomes free of desire, pure receptivity and at peace, as if nothing existed, 15.17Only one thing has existed, exists and will exist in the ocean ofbeing. You have no bondage or liberation. Live happily andfulfilled. 15.18Being pure consciousness, do not disturb your mind with thoughts offor and against. Be at peace and remain happily in yourself, theessence of joy. 15.19Give up meditatio completely and hold nothing in your mind. You arefree in your very nature, so what will you achieve by thinking?15.20Ashtavakra saidMy son, you may recite or listen to countless scriptures, but vouwill not be established within until you can forget everything 16.1 You may, as a learned man, indulge in wealth, activity and meditation, but your mind will still long for that which is thecessation of desire, and beyond all goals. 16.2Everyone is in pain because of their own effort, but noonerealises it. By just this very instruction, the lucky one attainstranquillity. 16.3Happiness belongs to noone but that supremely lazy man for whomeven opening and closing his eyes is a bother. 16.4When the mind is freed from such pairs of opposites as, I have donethis, and I have not done that, it becomes indifferent to merit, wealth, sensuality and liberation. 16.5One man is abstemious and is averse to the senses, another isgreedy and attached to them, but he who is free from both takingand rejecting is neither abstemious nor greedy. 16.6So long as desire, which is the state of lack of discrimination, remains, the sense of revulsion and attraction will remain, whichis the root and branch of samsara. 16.7Desire springs from usage, and aversion from abstension, but thewise man is free from the pairs of opposites like a child, and becomes established. 16.8The passionate man wants to be rid of samsara so as to avoid pain, but the dispassionate man is without pain and feels no distresseven in it. 16.9He who is proud about even liberation or his own body, and feelsthem his own, is neither a seer or a yogi. He is still just asufferer. 16.10If even Shiva, Vishnu or the lotus-born Brahma were your instructor, until you have forgotten everything you cannot be stablished within. 16.11 Ashtavakta said He who is content, with purified senses, and always enjoyssolitude, has gained the fruit of knowledge and the fruit of the practice of yoga too. 17.1The knower of truth is never distressed in this world, for thewhole round world is full of himself alone. 17.2None of these senses please a man who has found satisfaction within, just as Nimba leaves do not please the elephant that likesSallaki leaves. 17.3The man who is not attached to the things he has enjoyed, and doesnot hanker after the things he has not enjoyed, such a man is hardto find. 17.4Those who desire pleasure and those who desire liberation are both found in samsara, but the great souled man who desires neither pleasure nor liberation is rare indeed. 17.5It is only the noble minded who is free from attraction orrepulsion to religion, wealth, sensuality, and life and death too.17.6He feels no desire for the elimination of all this, nor anger atits continuing, so the lucky man lives happily with whateversustinence presents itself. 17.7Thus fulfilled through this knowledge, contented and with thethinking mind emptied, he lives happily just seeing, hearing, feeling, smelling and tasting. 17.8In him for whom the ocean of samsara has dried up, there is neitherattachment or aversion. His gaze is vacant, his behaviourpurposeless, and his senses inactive. 17.9Surely the supreme state is everywhere for the liberated mind. He isneither awake or asleep, and neither opens or closes his eyes.17.10The liberated man is resplendent everywhere, free from all desires. Everywhere he appears self-possessed and pure of heart. 17.11Seeing, hearing, feeling, smelling, tasting, speaking and walking about, the great souled man who is freed from trying to achieve or avoid anything is free indeed. 17.12The liberated man is free from desires everywhere. He neitherblames, praises, rejoices, is disappointed, gives nor takes. 17.13When a great souled one is unperturbed in mind and selfpossessedat either the sight of a woman full of desire or at approachingdeath, he is truly liberated. 17.14There is no distinction between pleasure and pain, man and woman, success and failure for the wise man who looks on everything asequal. 17.15There is no aggression or compassion, no pride or humility, nowonder or confusion for the man whose days of running about areover. 17.16The liberated man is not averse to the senses and nor is heattached to them. He enjoys hinself continually with an unattachedmind in both achievement and non-achievement. 17.17One established in the Absolute state with an empty mind does notknow the alternatives of inner stillness and lack of innerstillness, and of good and evil. 17.18Free of me and mine and of a sense of responsibility, aware that Nothing exists, with all desires extinguished within, a man doesnot act even in acting. 17.19He whose thinking mind is dissolved achieves the indescribablestate and is free from the mental display of delusion, dream andignorance. 17.20Ashtavakra saidPraise be to that by the awareness of which delusion itself becomes dream-like, to that which is pure happiness, peace and light. 18.1One may get all sorts of pleasure by the acquisition of various objects of enjoyment, but one cannot be happy except by therenunciation of everything. 18.2How can there be happiness, for one who has been burnt inside bythe blistering sun of the pain of things that need doing, withoutthe rain of the nectar of peace? 18.3This existence is just imagination. It is nothing in reality, butthere is no non-being for natures that know how to distinguishbeing from non being. 18.4The realm of one's self is not far away, and nor can it be achieved by the addition of limitations to its nature. It is unimaginable effortless, unchanging and spotless, 18.5By the simple elimination of delusion and the recognition of one'strue nature, those whose vision is unclouded live free from sorrow.18.6Knowing everything as just imagination, and himself as eternallyfree, how should the wise man behave like a fool? 18.7Knowing himself to be God and being and non-being just imagination, what should the man free from desire learn, say or do? 18.8Considerations like I am this or I am not this are finished for theyogi who has gone silent realising Everything is myself. 18.9For the vogi who has found peace, there is no distraction or one-pointedness, no higher knowledge or ignorance. no pleasure andno pain. 18.10The dominion of heaven or beggary, gain or loss, life among men orin the forest, these make no difference to a yogi whose nature it is to be free from distinctions. 18.11 There is no religion, wealth, sensuality or discrimination for ayogi free from the pairs of opposites such as I have done this and I have not done that. 18.12There is nothing needing to be done, or any attachment in his heartfor the yogi liberated whie still alive. Things are just forlife-time. 18.13There is no delusion, world, meditation on That, or liberation forthe pacified great soul. All these things are just the realm ofimagination. 18.14He by whom all this is seen may well make out it doesn't exist, butwhat is the desireless one to do. Even in seeing it he does not seeit. 18.15He by whom the Supreme Brahma is seen may think I am Brahma, butwhat is he to think who is without thought, and who sees noduality. 18.16He by whom inner distraction is seen may put an end to it, but thenoble one is not distracted. When there is nothing to achieve whatis he to do? 18.17The wise man, unlike the worldly man, does not see inner stillness distraction or fault in himself, even when living like a worldlyman. 18.18Nothing is done by him who is free from being and non-being, who iscontented, desireless and wise, even if in the world's eyes he doesact. 18.19The wise man who just goes on doing what presents itself for him todo, encounters no difficulty in either activity or inactivity.18.20He who is desireless, self-reliant, independent and free of bondsfunctions like a dead leaf blown about by the wind of causality .18.21There is neither joy nor sorrow for one who has transcendedsamsara. With a peaceful mind he lives as if without a body. 18.22He whose joy is in himself, and who is peaceful and pure within hasno desire for renunciation or sense of loss in anything. 18.23For the man with a naturally empty mind, doing just as he pleases, there is no such thing as pride or false humility, as there is forthe natural man. 18.24This action was done by the body but not by me. The pure natured person thinking like this, is not acting even when acting . 18.25He who acts without being able to say why, but is not thereby afool, he is one liberated while still alive, happy and blessed. Hethrives even in samsara. 18.26He who has had enough of endless considerations and has attained topeace, does not think, know, hear or see. 18.27He who is beyond mental stillness and distraction, does not desire either liberation or its opposite. Recognising that things are just constructions of the imagination, that great soul lives as God hereand now. 18.28He who feels responsibility within, acts even when not acting, butthere is no sense of done or undone for the wise man who free from the sense of responsibility. 18.29 The mind of the liberated man is not upset or pleased. It shinesunmoving, desireless, and free from doubt. 18.30He whose mind does not set out to meditate or act, meditates andacts without an object. 18.31A stupid man is bewildered when he hears the real truth, while even clever man is humbled by it just like the fool. 18.32The ignorant make a great effort to practise onepointedness andthe stopping of thought, while the wise see nothing to be done andremain in themselves like those asleep. 18.33The stupid does not attain cessation whether he acts or abandonsaction, while the wise man find peace within simply by knowing thetruth. 8.34People cannot come to know themselves by practices - pureawareness, clear, complete, beyond multiplicity and faultlessthough they are. 8.35The stupid does not achieve liberation even through regular practice, but the fortunate remains free and actionless simply by discrimination. 18.36The stupid does not attain Godhead because he wants to be it, whilethe wise man enjoys the Supreme Godhead without even wanting it.18.37Even when living without any support and eager for achievement, thestupid are still nourishing Samsara, while the wise have cut at thevery root of its unhappiness. 18.38The stupid does not find peace because he is wanting it, while thewise discriminating the truth is always peaceful minded. 18.39How can there be self knowledge for him whose knowledge depends onwhat he sees. The wise do not see this and that, but see themselves as unending, 18.40 How can there be cessation of thought for the misguided who isstriving for it. Yet it is there always naturally for the wise mandelighted in himself. 18.41Some think that something exists, and others that nothing does.Rare is the man who does not think either, and is thereby free from distraction. 18.42 Those of weak intelligene think of themselves as pure nonduality, but because of their delusion do not know this, and remainunfulfilled all their lives. 18.43The mind of the man seeking liberation can find no resting placewithin, but the mind of the liberated man is always free fromdesire by the very fact of being without a resting place. 18.44Seeing the tigers of the senses the frightened refuge-seek ers atonce enter the cave in search of cessation of thought andone-pointedness. 18.45Seeing the desireless lion the elephants of the senses silently runaway, or, if they cannot, serve him like flatterers. 18.46The man who is free from doubts and whose mind is free does notbother about means of liberation. Whether seeing, hearing, feelingsmelling or tasting, he lives at ease. 18.47He whose mind is pure and undistracted from the simple hearing of the Truth sees neither something to do nor something to avoid nora cause for indifference. 18.48The straight forward person does whatever arrives to be done, goodor bad, for his actions are like those of a child. 18.49By inner freedom one attains happiness, by inner freedom onereaches the Supreme, by inner freedom one comes to absence ofthought, by inner freedom to the Ultimate State. 18.50When one sees oneself as neither the doer nor the reaper of the consequences, then all mind waves come to an end. 18.51The spontaneous unassumed behaviour of the wise is noteworthy, butnot the deliberate purposeful stillness of the fool. 18.52The wise who are rid of imagination, unbound and with unfetteredawareness may enjoy themselves in the midst of many goods, oralternatively go off to mountain caves. 18.53There is no attachment in the heart of a wise man whether he seesor pays homage to a learned brahmin, a celestial being, a holyplace, a woman, a king or a friend. 18.54A yogi is not in the least put out even when humiliated by theridicule of servants, sons, wives, grandchildren or otherrelatives. 18.55Even when pleased he is not pleased, not suffering even when inpain. Only those like him can know the wonderful state of such aman. 18.56It is the sense of responsibility which is Samsara. The wise who are of the form of emptiness, formless, unchanging and spotless seen such thing. 18.57Even when doing nothing the fool is agitated by restlessness, whilea skilful man remains undisturbed even when doing what there is todo. 18.58Happy he stands, happy he sits, happy sleeps and happy he comes andgoes. Happy he speaks, and happy he eats. This is the life of a manat peace. 18.59He who of his very nature feels no unhappiness in his daily lifelike worldly people, remains undisturbed like a great lake, allsorrow gone. 18.60Even abstention from action leads to action in a fool, while eventhe action of the wise man brings the fruits of inaction. 18.61A fool often shows aversion towards his belongings, but for himwhose attachment to the body has dropped away, there is neither attachment nor aversion, 18,62The mind of the fool is always caught in thinking or not thinking, but the wise man's is of the nature of no thought because he thinkswhat should be thought. 18.63For the seer who behaves like a child, without desire in allactions, there is no attachment for such a pure one even in thework he he does. 18.64Blessed is he who knows himself and is the same in all states, with a mind free from craving whether he is seeing, hearing, feeling, smelling or tasting. 18.65There is no man subject to Samsara, sense of individuality, goal ormeans to the goal for the wise man who is always free fromimaginations, and unchanging as space? 18.66Glorious is he who has abandoned all goals and is the incarnation of satisfaction, his very nature, and whose inner focus on the Unconditioned is quite spontaneous. 18.67In brief, the great-souled man who has come to know the Truth is without desire for either pleasure or liberation, and is always andeverywhere free from attachment. 18.68What remains to be done by the man who is pure awareness and hasabandoned everything that can be expressed in words from thehighest heaven to the earth itself? 18.69The pure man who has experienced the Indescribable attains peace byhis own nature, realising that all this is nothing but illusion, anthat nothing is. 18.70There are no rules, dispassion, renunciation or meditation for onewho is pure receptivity by nature, and admits no knowable form ofbeing? 18.71For him who shines with the radiance of Infinity and is not subject to natural causality there is neither bondage, liberation, pleasurenor pain. 18.72Pure illusion reigns in Samsara which will continue until selfrealisation, but the enlightened man lives in the beauty of freedomfrom me and mine, from the sense of responsibility and from anyattachment. 18.73For the seer who knows himself as imperishable and beyond painthere is neither knowledge, a world nor the sense that I am thebody or the body mine. 18.74No sooner does a man of low intelligence give up activities likethe elimination of thought than he falls into mental chariot racingand babble. 18.75A fool does not get rid of his stupidity even on hearing the truth. He may appear outwardly free from imaginations, but inside he ishankering after the senses still. 18.76Though in the eyes of the world he is active, the man who has shedaction through knowledge finds no means of doing or speakinganything. 18.77For the wise man who is always unchanging and fearless there is neither darkness nor light nor destruction, nor anything, 18.78There is neither fortitude, prudence nor courage for the yogi whosenature is beyond description and free of individuality. 18.79There is neither heaven nor hell nor even liberation during life. In a nutshell, in the sight of the seer nothing exists at all.18.80He neither longs for possessions nor grieves at their absence. Thecalm mind of the sage is full of the nectar of immortality. 18.81The dispassionate does not praise the good or blame the wicked.Content and equal in pain and pleasure, he sees nothing that needsdoing. 18.82The wise man does not dislike samsara or seek to know himself. Freefrom pleasure and impatience, he is not dead and he is not alive.18.83The wise man stands out by being free from anticipation, withoutattachment to such things as children or wives, free from desire for the senses, and not even concerned about his own body. 18.84Peace is everywhere for the wise man who lives on whatever happens to come to him, going to wherever he feels like, and sleepingwherever the sun happens to set. 18.85Let his body rise or fall. The great souled one gives it nothought, having forgotten all about samsara in coming to rest onthe ground of his true nature. 18.86The wise man has the joy of being complete in himself and withoutpossessions, acting as he pleases, free from duality and rid ofdoubts, and without attachment to any creature. 18.87The wise man excels in being without the sense of "me". Earth, astone or gold are the same ti him. The knots of his hard have beenrent asunder, and he is freed from greed and blindness. 18.88Who can compare with that contented, liberated soul who pays noregard to anything and has no desire left in his heart? 18.89Who but the upright man without desire knows without knowing, seeswithout seeing and speaks without speaking? 18.90Beggar or king, he excels who is without desire, and whose opinion of things is rid of "good" and "bad". 18.91There is neither dissolute behaviour nor virtue, nor even discrimination of the truth for the sage who has reached the goaland is the very embodiment of guileless sincerity. 18.92That which is experienced within by one desireless and free frompain, and content to rest in himself - how could it be described, and of whom? 18.93The wise man who is contented in all circumstances is not asleepeven in deep sleep, not sleeping in a dream, nor waking when he isawake. 18.94The seer is without thoughts even when thinking, without sensesamong the senses, without understanding even in understanding and without a sense of responsibility even in the ego. 18.95Neither happy nor unhappy, neither detached nor attached, neitherseeking liberation nor liberated, he is neither something nornothing. 18.96Not distracted in distraction, in mental stillness not poised, instupidity not stupid, that blessed one is not even wise in hiswisdom. 18.97The liberated man is self-possessed in all circumstances and freefrom the idea of "done" and "still to do. He is the same whereverhe is and without greed. He does not dwell on what he has done ornot done. 18.98He is not pleased when praised nor upset when blamed. He is notafraid of death nor attached to life. 18.99A man at peace does not run off to popular places or to theforest. Whatever and wherever, he remains the same. 18.100Janaka saidUsing the tweezers of the knowledge of the truth I have managed toextract the painful thorn of endless opinions from the recesses ofmy heart. 19.1For me, established in my own glory, there is no religion, sensuality, possessions, philosophy, duality or even non-duality. 19.2For me established in my own glory, there is no past, future orpresent. There is no space or even eternity. 19.3For me established in my own glory, there is no self or non-self, no good or evil, no thought or even absence of thought. 19.4For me established in my own glory, there is no dreaming or deepsleep, no waking nor fourth state beyond them, and certainly nofear. 19.5For me established in my own glory, there is nothing far away and nothing near, nothing within or without, nothing large and nothingsmall. 19.6For me established in my own glory, there is no life or death, noworlds or things of this world, no distraction and no stillness ofmind. 19.7For me remaining in myself, there is no need for talk of the threegoals of life, of yoga or of knowledge. 19.8Janaka saidIn my unblemished nature there are no elements, no body, nofaculties no mind. There is no void and no despair. 20.1For me, free from the sense of dualism, there are no scriptures, noself-knowledge, no mind free from an object, no satisfaction and nofreedom from desire. 20.2There is no knowledge or ignorance, no "me", "this" or "mine", nobondage, no liberation, and no property of self-nature. 20.3For him who is always free from individual characteristics there is no antecedent causal action, no liberation during life, and nofulfilment at death. 20.4For me, free from individuality, there is no doer and no reaper of the consequences, no cessation of action, no arising of thought, noimmediate object, and no idea of results. 20.5There is no world, no seeker for liberation, no yogi, no seer, no-one bound and no-one liberated. I remain in my own non-dualnature. 20.6There is no emanation or return, no goal, means, seeker orachievment. I remain in my own non-dual nature. 20.7For me who am forever unblemishedf, there is no assessor, nostandard, nothing to assess, or assessment. 20.8For me who am forever actionless, there is no distraction orone-pointedness of mind, no lack of understanding, no stupidity, nojoy and no sorrow. 20.9For me who am always free from deliberations there is neither conventional truth nor absolute truth, no happiness and nosuffering. 20.10For me who am forever pure there is no illusion, no samsara, noattachment or detechment, no living being and no God. 20.11For me who am forever unmovable and indivisible. established inmyself, there is no activity or inactivity, no liberation and nobondage. 20.12For me who am blessd and without limitation, there is no initiationor scripture, no disciple or teacher, and no goal of human life.20.13There is no being or non-being, no unity or dualism. What more isthere to say? Nothing emanates from me. 20.14Commentaries on these brief passages usually appear as books of 300 to 400 pages. One of the best I have come across is that of Swami Chinmayananda, 1979 EDITION, available from any good Vedic bookstore or direct at CENTRAL CHINMAYA MISSION TRUST, 17 HARRINGTON ROAD, MADRAS INDIA 600 031.
