

/* Here's the full text of the Federal Trade Commission's Holder in Due Course Rule. This is one of consumer's most important protections in the never ending battle between consumer's rights and bad business. Under this rule, virtually every consumer transaction in which a loan is made, if the finance contract is assigned to a lender, then the lender IS SUBJECT TO ALL OF THE CLAIMS that the consumer has against the original seller. This means that if you enter into an agreement and then properly refuse to pay because the merchandise is defective, then if the finance contract has been assigned, you nevertheless may assert the same claims against the holder of the contract. In other words, in a consumer transaction where this notice appears, a bank or other lender that later purchases your finance contract cannot tell you to bring your complaints against the original seller, and that it's not their problem-- because it is. Of course, a business transaction is NOT subject to these rules. */
