

Originally, the interior space of the synagogue was divided by two rows of columns into a central nave flanked by an aisle on either side. Two of these columns, still standing, can be seen in this view. Columns also ran across the back. The interior length is more than 83 feet and the total interior width is more than 58 feet.