

LIBER @M

ARTIFICIAL LIFE MAGICK

Part][

Computers in my opinion will gain sentience when they acquire the ability to destroy. This is not only for evolutionary reasons, but for a more human one. Fear is the chemical in the brain that produces the emotion that tells us to take flight and get the fuck out of their. It also allows us to put much attention into the developments of patterns, so we can see events [dangerous ones] unfolding long before they occur. This prophecy or Gestalt is the reason behind our present status as rulers of the URth. Western 'white' man is probably one of the most fearful races of our species, Homo-Sapien. This is evident in the fear that is white racism. Which is often ignorantly identified with hate, when in actuality it is the fear of the unknown [occult]. This urban neurosis is known as Xenophobia. Fear is the weak emotion prevalent only in creatures of a similar physical stature. This weakness is thus evidence of the absence of wild unkempt adventure in ones life. Such a dangerous avocation is rarely indulged by weaker species, and its such hair raising adventure that is the stuff of life. This is the true reason behind our urban neurosis, its the divorce of man from the adventurous life of Nature. His loss of instinct [strong emotion, especially the unconscious irrational anger of the wild] is evidence of his abstraction and objectification from the vital world. Its this objectivity though that makes science possible; this was provided to us by our xenophobic fear of nature. This further explains the true psychological motives behind the demons [fears] that haunt us at night. For when the darkness of ignorance descends upon us, are vision- so crucial to our ability to think ahead by noticing patterns, is almost eliminated. It is at such times when we begin to loose control of our situation, and life is thrown into chaos. So I feel it becomes obvious that our fear of the werewolf and other such alien(ated) beasts is in actuality our fear of the undomesticated URth. One of our greatest horror stories, so loved by our masochistic society, was given to us appropriate enough by the European Mary Shelly. Her story of Frankenstein is the moral tale of the danger that can occur when a dead man is brought back to life. Such danger is evident in the razor like claws of the night stalkers that roam the dense URban landrape, where one doesn't often find a neurotic suppression of emotion. To bring a human to life would evoke the untamed emotion of the wild [and natural] beast. Behavior of this kind is frowned upon in our domesticated rational society. The wild beast exists only in small cells behind bars; as is obvious by any visit to zoo, ghetto, or state ran prison. The problem with the suppression of emotional instinct is that a sort of volcano effect occurs, where pressure continually builds until it erupts in a orgasm of violence. Such apocalyptic events can be seen in the serial killer [who are often quiet white men] and the child of the new aeon itself, the @m bomb [@m, like Cain- the son of Adam and Lilith, is the murder of man]. These have the ability to destroy civilization as we know it, and such disorder would bring anarchy to the safe suburban white fortress [where with the help of the KKK and the police the savages are kept at bay]. So we see the reason why Frankenstein is perhaps our most frightening myth. For in its pages a dead man is brought back to life, and such strength is not easily subdued. And accordingly all hell then breaks loose.

Satan was largely based upon the Greek pagan god Pan, its from this wild god of nature that we get our words for panic and pandemonium. So therefore for a computer to gain sentience it would have to gain the ability to destroy. The life of a creature is certain when it turns on us and threatens are control of a situation; this feeling is also evident in us when we liberate ourselves from the taboo of conformity. Such a rebel was the Angel Lucifer and of course Frankenstein's monster.

Some might say that the Virus has given the computer this power of annihilation. So conditions might become right for the eviloution of the digital machine into the unconventional domain of life. Anyone who hasn't been witness to a computer acting irrational, hasn't had their system infected by a virus. If ever a computer were created that had the ability to obliterate weaker machines, and actually posed a real threat to the beuracracy of our great democracy, it would soon be destroyed [like all other dangerous predators] or subdued and incarcerated. Scientists who study the medicine of life would then dissect the code to the discover its mystery; which ironically enough we created in the first place. Such dissection would inevitably destroy the life of the beast, like the splitting of the @m. Only becoming another casualty in sciences War in Heaven.

The original part one of this document before you was conceived in the bored mind of the author many moons ago. My loose speculations on the creation of NEW and IMPROVED invisible friends, the holy grail of geekdom, seems rather prophetic now. In the time that separates these articles my understanding of the operation of (my) Nature has grown with great Quantum leaps. These leaps have occurred in the form of Paradigm shifts that alter ones reality principle, allowing for momentary glimpses of the world from an eagles eye view. Such a gestalt occurred when I formulated the hypothesis mentioned in the first half of this essay. Years had passes since I had last thought about the implications of the emergence of Nu life. With such change coums the prophecy I make now that the computer will slay man, and the only thing to survive such a nuclear winter will be digital life. These are the Maitian Mutations spoken of by Kenneth Grant.

Consider this a vision of your coming impending doom. Where in the child of the Nu aeon, @m, murders his brother (B)abel. The computer will be able to fulfill this evolutionary role, when and if it gains the power to annihilate goD [its creator]. As of now it sits at your desk like a lump of clay waiting to have the breath of life evoked. In my opinion conditions are already favorable for the spirit to be given flesh.

The ghost in the machine is created by means of viral infection. This causes the machines code to be altered in ways never dreamed of by its creators, and such mutations become the gray goo nightmares of sys operators everywhere. This emergent life will only become more resilient, for the forces of evil(ou) are hard at work to defeat any means of slowing it down.

In my original article I made the point that where AI scientists erred was that they had only succeeded in creating one hemisphere of the brain. That they being the anal types they are hadn't even noticed the more chaotic and destructive elements of nature. Such attributes are commonly associated with the Right brain [which interestingly enough controls the left hand]. I had speculated then that until they had succeeded in uniting these opposing forces, their work would be for naught. At that time though I was quite unsure how this 'Chaos' could be created; now I think I may. For in my opinion due to the destructive emotional drives of the Hacker we now have computer viruses that do just that [wreak havoc]. This shock to the system is the equivalent of Frankenstein's monster being re-animated via the destructive power of light. This bolt from the blue is the spirit descending to the Urth where via evocation it is given flesh. Soon the boring calculator begins to act a bit irrational, exhibiting strange spontaneous behavior. I find it interesting that I described the ego [the fortress of logic] as the memetic meta-virus, and a computer virus would represent chaos. This is explained as a matter of density, for the virus of ego extended far enough becomes Information so dense that it begins to become incoherent. This is mirrored in Physics where the rational world of Newton, was replaced by the very abstract realm of Einstein, and is now surpassed by the alien realm of Quantum physics. Where as the ego correlates to the falling Apple, the computer virus correlates to the vibrating @omic particle, that is beyond [i.e. is alien to] rational comprehension. So by destroying the computers towering walls of addiction and subtraction, your allowing possibility for creativity to surface. Pushing this mutation are the dark forces of the Pandemonaeon; emerging to inaugurate the Nu Aeon of the @m bomb. The Fat man will once again arise, to the Splendor and glory of the coming of the Lord.

Peace Be With You

Fr.: YOG Qadmon 5.66