All of these images were created in much the same way. Firstly, several photographs were taken using my gorgeous little Nikon Cool-Pix digital camera. With the help(?) of my laptop P.C. they were imported to my Amiga.

Secondly, I used the 'LoadBackdrop' in Imagine 4 to align the 3D objects correctly and then loaded the resultant images into either Photogenics 2 or into PPaint. (PPaint was used to create hold out mattes to allow me to place graphics behind the photographs. In the case of the one with the Tardis it can be a lengthy process.)

Thirdly, all post production was carried out using the aforementioned Photogenics to try and give a sense of realism and not to make the pictures look cobbled together in a few seconds.

To view them, just double click on its icon if you have VT in your C: drawer, or you can use any viewer because the images are saved as JPEGs.

Just a little note to say hello, and to give a little background info about my artwork. Most people who have seen my stuff can't believe that I use what has been described as a "kiddies toy." Imagine the shock to some PC owners on finding that I could add graphic cards and sound cards to my Amiga.

Equipment used by myself; - A towered A1200 (030/50mhz, 2.1Gb HD, CD-Rom)
Imagine v.5
Photogenics v.2
PPaint v7.0
Nikon CoolPix digital camera
Compaq Amarda laptop (nessarcery evil)
Network PC
TurboPrint with Canon BJC210

If only I could afford a lovely PPC Accelerator.
