The Integrated Curriculum at Rose-Hulman, which began in the 1990 - 1991 school year and relies heavily upon the NeXT computer, originally hired ten developers to develop scientific software for the NeXT computer in the summer of 1990. The software development project continued into the summer of 1991 during which this application was originally conceived by Jeffery Adams. Jeff completed some rough work on the project and passed it onto Frank Volkers who worked on it until the end of the summer. David Holscher completed the project to date.
