

Herman Oberth, a German, was the second theoretician, with perhaps the greatest vision. His work had the biggest impact on the new and exciting field of rocket science and space exploration. His first book, published in 1923, was his most famous, and was called "The Rocket into Interplanetary Space." It includes proofs about the movement of rockets through space and atmosphere.