

Eyes 1.7

Copyright © 1991-1992 by Michael J. Gibbs, all rights reserved.

Eyes is shareware. If you use it, send $5 to:

Michael J. Gibbs
16751 Queen Esther Dr.
Surprise, AZ 85374

Eyes is a small utility based on the the X-Windows program called XEyes. It “watches” the mouse pointer as it moves about the screen. Eyes can be useful on large monitors where the pointer can sometimes get lost in the clutter.

You can position the Eyes window anywhere on the screen and it will remember that position the next time it runs. It also remembers the color you select for the eyes, which is done with the Eye Color menu. The eyes can be given a blood-shot effect by selecting Tired from the File menu. If you are handy with ResEdit, you can edit the “PAT ” resource in Eyes to change the blood-shot appearance.

Eyes should run on any Macintosh computer running system software version 6 with Multifinder or system software version 7 or later. Eyes will run without Multifinder under system 6, but what’s the point? Due to the way that Eyes remembers its window position and color, it should not be shared over a network; put a copy on each Macintosh.