

Tweening is a traditional animation term that describes when a lead animator draws the pictures where major changes take place and assistants draw all the frames in between.

Tweening is useful not only for moving sprites, but also for changing size and blend settings.