RSA technologies are part of existing and proposed standards for the Internet and World Wide Web, ITU-T, ISO, ANSI, IEEE, and business, financial and electronic commerce networks around the globe. The company develops and markets platform-independent developer's kits and end-user products, and provides comprehensive cryptographic consulting services.

Speaker Background

Jim Bidzos has been President of RSA Data Security, a Security Dynamics Company, for ten years. Under his leadership, RSA has become the worldwide de facto standard for encryption, being included in such products as Lotus Notes, Novell Netware, Netscape Navigator, Intuit's Quicken, and Microsoft Windows 95. There are over 100 million copies of RSA's software in use today. No other company in the world comes close to matching this successful development of encryption technology. If you use products from IBM, AT&T, Lotus, Sun, Novell, Netscape, Spyglass, or over two hundred others, you are already using RSA. Soon, you'll be using RSA to do credit card transactions on the net. VISA, MasterCard, IBM, Microsoft, Netscape, CyberCash, and Digicash, among others all use RSA in their electronic money products and services.

On April 15, 1996, Jim together with Charles R. Stuckey, Jr., president and CEO of Security Dynamics, a leading provider of computer and network security solutions, announced the merger of the two companies. On July 29, 1996, Security Dynamics announced the completion of the acquisition of RSA. In connection with the merger, Security Dynamics Board of Directors elected him as a director and an executive vice president of the company. The marriage of RSA and Security Dynamics positioned the new combined Company as the undisputed leader of the security industry.
