

Here's what the trade press is saying about QuicKeys™, CE Software's time-saving utility for the Macintosh

"There isn't anything you do on your Mac that you can't do faster with QuicKeys . . . Everything you do more than once—QuicKey it!"

MacHome Journal
May, 1997

"QuicKeys is still more accessible for nontechnical users . . ."

" . . . QuicKeys makes it easy to create the most common types of simple shortcuts . . . And when you want to develop a more complex macro, QuicKeys' powerful recording feature lets you easily program it by manually performing the actions you want."

MacWEEK

"For efficiency fans everywhere, the release of CE software's QuicKeys 3.5.2 is welcome news."

" . . . QuicKeys is still the most direct route to giving your control key and F-keys a purpose. For tasks such as typing your return address, launching programs, or processing Photoshop files, QuicKeys is still a winning, and now faster, software servant."

Macworld
July, 1997

"QuicKeys is a very polished program. Its interface dazzles the user with features, menus and icons designed to provide a user interface that allows control of macro actions without having to do the actual scripting."

"A user can set up a macro quickly and painlessly on QuicKeys by using its auto-record feature."

" . . . QuicKey shas a broader user appeal with its elegant interface, ease of use, adn its many great features and goodies . . . "

International Press

"With its hugely flexible approach QuicKeys competes well against the more application specific AppleScript builders and it will suit the less techie among us who don't want or need to script. If you perform repetitive tasks on a daily bases—and most of us do even if it's only launching an application and selecting a template—QuicKeys can either save you time or free it up to perform some other equally important task, like make a coffee or have a natter. 80 pounds isn't a lot to pay for a piece of software that could pay for itself within hours."
