ShowShare is a group effort. Even though it says 'by Robert Hess' it's really 'by Robert Hess and a bunch of people foolish enough to get involved'. One person in particular deserves major thanks: Keith Rollin went way beyond the call of duty (of course, he had no duty to help me at all, so we'll just say he helped me far more than anyone should be expected to help some random idiot who starts sending them mail). Keith Rollin is a lot nicer person late at night than Robert Hess is on a really good day.

Additionally, ShowShare has some of its better interface issues and features thanks to the input of Stephen Howard. It also took two days longer to release because he kept coming up with better interface ideas and features…

Last but not least, the following people took an active roll in sending me comments, suggestions bug reports and encouragement: Dave "If it's not scriptable it's CRAP!" Winer (who's going to help us make ShowShare intensely AppleEvent cool), Murph "Did you know turning AppleTalk off crashes it?" Sewell, Tom "HyperCorrosive™" Conrad, Adam "No cute nickname" Engst, Ken "Soon, the world will know the glory of my n—" McLeod (I suspect that comment won't be in the next version of these docs) and Jon "I'm not using it but I like it!" Pugh.
