

ell, it's probably as solid as System 7 was when Apple made this claim!

Welcome to Apollo version 1.0, the launching utility. This is the fifth major release of Apollo. Beta versions 0.5, 0.6, 0.7 and 0.8 have been widely used and very well-received: the feedback, in the forms of suggestions for improvements and bug reports, was overwhelming and extraordinarily helpful. Apollo has very much been shaped by its users.

Although I am very grateful to everyone who helped me in the writing of Apollo, special thanks are due to a few people. Mark Nagata, René Ros, Steve Satre, Murph Sewall and Karl-König Königsson tested version 1.0, at the expense of not a few system crashes, and helped to make it as solid as it now is. Mike Tsaoutos gave me the idea for better icons, and Ben Bidstrup allowed me frequent use of his colour Macs on which to design them. Last, and definitely not least, my wife Chloë, who regarded my frequent and prolonged absences at the Mac with quite astonishing calm and understanding.

Apollo has been extensively tested and is believed to be free of bugs. Nevertheless, no responsibility will be accepted for any loss, however caused, which may or may not be consequent upon the use of Apollo.

Jeremy Roussak (jeremyr@dcs.qmw.ac.uk)
88 Oxhey Avenue
Oxhey
Watford
WD1 4HA
ENGLAND

Copyright notice

The Apollo suite of programs is copyright © Jeremy Roussak 1991/92. All rights are reserved.

Apollo 1.0, unlike previous versions, is shareware. If you propose to keep it, I ask that you pay a small registration fee ($US30/£15 sterling). See the "Registering Apollo" chapter or Apollo's Registering... dialog for more details.

Permission is granted to reproduce unregistered copies of Apollo and its associated programs without charge. Apollo and its associated programs may be published on bulletin board and similar services provided no charge over and above the usual connection charges is made for access to them. If Apollo and its associated programs are to be distributed on a “for profit” basis, written permission must be obtained from the author in advance of such distribution. The distribution of registered copies of Apollo is forbidden under all circumstances.

All trademarks referred to in this document are acknowledged.