Look what they're saying...

"CompuServe is the Swiss army knife of all online services. The largest of the Big Four services, CompuServe is functional, dependable, and has something for almost everyone."

---PC World

"If you are prepared to devote a bit of time to finding out what's there, the range of available information is quite staggering."

---Windows User

With regard to the CompuServe Information Manager:

"... No other front-end software...goes so far to cut a complex communications service down to size. Off-line reading and composition of e-mail, automatic downloads that require no knowledge of protocols, and the ability to organize a desktop of folders and automate an excursion through favorite haunts are among the many fine menu-driven functions ..."

---PC Magazine

"Online computer communication is getting faster...the CompuServe information network introduced a higher connection speed that whips messages, programs and other data back and forth 50 percent faster than at the previous top speed of 9,600 bits per second and generally six times faster than the 2,400 bps pace considered standard until last year. The new 14,400 bps service -- being offered gradually throughout the country -- is spurring changes at other online services."
