

Clip Art

(Spooky images...)

This Issue

Clip art is more than just goofy little pictures. For instance, were you aware that clip art can also be used to enhance documents in many programs from desktop publishers to word processors? Well, warm that PC up and get ready to import because we've got a fresh batch of fifteen, count 'em, fifteen pieces of clip art just waiting to be used in your next school newsletter, information pamphlet or letter to the editor (hint, hint).

We've run out of creative names for all of our various clip art images (much like our textured wallpapers). In our new format, each clip art image has a number, and below is a brief description of the image. In the future, we are going to publish a clip art manager that can keep track of your clip art based on those numbers. They are named in this way:

XXXXwSSS.PCX

Where XXXX is the four digit number, "w" means "Windows," and SSS is the issue number.

Images by Studio Advertising Art

(collections of images are available online at www.downloadstore.com)

0001	Cat
0002	Spooky Eyes
0003	A Fun Ghost
0004	Gravestone Ghost
0005	Simple Ghost
0006	Happy Halloween
0007	Bubbling Cauldron
0008	Half Moon
0009	Evil Owl
0010	Smilin' Pumpkin
0011	Sinister Pumpkin
0012	Skull
0013	A Silly Spider
0014	Grim Reaper
0015	Gravestone

We provide clip art in the standard PCX format, which is supported by almost all desktop publishing and word processing programs that edit, display, or print graphics. You can press the How to Use button for more information on how to use clip art images.