

The setting that the program assigns to a control or function if the user doesn't specify a setting.

A program's default setting usually doesn't need to be changed, but can be if a different effect is desired.

For example, the default setting for the poster frame is to use the first frame of the movie. You can change this to any other frame.