

OFF-LINE BROWSERS

In the search for ever faster Web access and ever smaller telephone bills, using an off-line browser is the answer to many a Net user's prayers. By downloading specific pages or whole chunks of Web sites in one fell swoop so they can then be read after disconnecting from the Net, off-line browsers not only save users money by reducing the time spent on-line, but free up time that would otherwise be spent clicking on links and waiting for pages to download.

On the disc this month we have Unmozify for Windows for you to try. Check out Info Evolution's web site <http://www.evolve.co.uk/unmozify/>. For those Mac aficionados out there, we have WebWhacker. Look up ForeFront at <http://www.ffg.com/internet.html>
