Only Fools and Horses: From Prussia with Love

He who dares... and dare you must with this memorable episode of Only Fools and Horses where everyday is another chance for Del to make his millions. Ahh, mange tout, mon ami. Plus, the Games domain includes a full update to Trainz and eight demos

Arguably the funniest and best-loved British comedy of all time, Only Fools and Horses has pulled in massive audiences ever since it was first broadcast on TV in 1981. And 21 years later the BBC is still making Christmas specials – although it is rumoured that this year's will be the last.

Only Fools and Horses revolves around Del and Rodney Trotter (played by David Jason and Nicholas Lyndhurst), two brothers living in a high-rise flat on Peckham's Nelson Mandela estate. Del, a self-styled wheeler-dealer, is the oldest of the pair – and though it is probably kinder to describe him as an opportunist, cynics might call him an unscrupulous swindler. Rodney, his younger but more socially conscious brother, certainly seems to think so, but this doesn't stop him getting involved in Delboy's schemes.

In this episode, Delboy reluctantly agrees to take on a pregnant German houseguest after some persuasion from his younger sibling. Delboy can see an opportunity in every situation, though, and after discovering that Anna doesn't want to keep her baby, Del offers his friend Boycie and his wife Marlene a chance to have the baby that they always wanted but could never have. But, of course, things rarely work out as Del plans them and the baby boy he promises Boycie turns out to be a girl – and this is not the only surprise in store for him.

Even if you've never seen Only Fools and Horses we think you'll love this episode and – if you've seen it before – you'll want to watch it again. It's absolutely crammed full of great laughs, from Del's attempts to speak French, Albert's even more ridiculous attempt to speak German and Rodney being mauled by a giant dog. There's half an hour of great comedy here for your enjoyment.
