APL 90 1.05 for Macintosh

March 1987

The new release of APL 90 for the APPLE Macintosh is now available.

APL 90 is a second generation APL. Although it conforms to the ISO standard, it offers many enhancements : mixed and generalized arrays, strand notation, ambivalent functions, user defined operators, new functions and operators.

APL 90 works with an efficient virtual memory, that offers you an unlimited number of symbols and elements in an array : even on a 512k Mac, you can work with arrays of a million of elements.

Version 1.05 of March 87 has many advantages over Version 0.98 of July 86 : it is twice as fast, corrects many bugs, offers many new functions, operators, and system functions. It includes a hundred of functions to interface with the graphic capabilities of the Macintosh, and there is even an up to date documentation.

APL 90 works on 512k Mac, on Macintosh Plus, on Macintosh SE and on Macintosh 2 (the machine is ugly, but APL is 3 to 8 times faster !), and can work with the switcher.
