Installation

The utilities may be installed by copying all of the above files to any directory on your machine. The two AfterDark modules should be copied to your AfterDark directory, for instance \AFTERDRK. The files are all independent and may be copied selectively with the exception of the executable files (i.e., EXE) having help files (i.e., HLP), which should be copied as pairs. The documentation files (*.WRI) are not required for operation. None of the programs have to be in a PATH directory, but doing so eliminates the need to type the full pathname to start the program.

Changed in this version

Aside from the addition of the CodeList utility (see below), the following changes are new in this version:

MATCH was recompiled with the Microsoft C/C++ Version 7 compiler, which made it faster, and has had an option added to cause it to not release the CPU to Windows while it does the comparison. Setting this option keeps other applications from running during that time, but on some systems seems to speed things significantly.

The individual WRI files did not get the author's new address in the last update. The correct address (in Sandy, UT) was in this README file in the last release, and should be correct everywhere now.

----- The latest application in the Barry Press Utilities ----- CodeList

CodeList is a Windows application to print ASCII files under Windows. It supports drag and drop operation, making it useful as an icon on the bottom of your screen, and is configurable for font, printer orientation, number of print columns, presence of line numbers, and other features. All the settings you choose (as well as the size and position of the CodeList window when not iconized) are remembered between invocations.

Further documentation for CodeList can be found in the file CODELIST.WRI.
